John looks at Sherlock in shock as Sherlock gets up and continues: "...so what or rather whom does she remove her rings for?" Sherlock: "Clearly not one lover; she'd never sustain the fiction of being single over that amount of time, so more likely a string of them. Simple." John admiringly says to Sherlock: "That's brilliant." Sherlock looks round at him and John immediately says: "Sorry." Lestrade asks: "Cardiff?" Sherlock says: "It's obvious, isn't it?" John: "It's not obvious to me." and stares at Sherlock. Sherlock pauses as he looks at the other two men and says seriously: "Dear God, what is it like in your funny little brains? It must be so boring." Sherlock turns back to the body and explains in a lively manner: "Her coat: it's slightly damp. She's been in heavy rain in the last few hours. No rain anywhere in London in that time." Sherlock continues, looking at Lestrade: "Under her coat collar is damp, too. She's turned it up against the wind. She's got an umbrella in her left-hand pocket but it's dry and unused: not just wind, strong wind - too strong to use her umbrella. We know from her suitcase that she was intending to stay overnight, so she must have come a decent distance but she can't have travelled more than two or three hours because her coat still hasn't dried." Sherlock reaches into his coat pocket and continues: "...So, where has there been heavy rain and strong wind within the radius of that travel time?" Sherlock shows the other two the webpage he was looking at earlier, displaying the day's weather for the Southern part of Britain. Sherlock states: "Cardiff." John exclaims: "That's fantastic!" Sherlock turns round to John and speaks in a low voice: "D'you know you do that out loud?" John apologetically says: "Sorry, I'll shut up." Sherlock replies in a low voice: "No it's...fine" Lestrade asks at the back: "Why do you keep saying suitcase?" Sherlock spins around in a circle to look around the room. Sherlock: "Yes, where is it? She must have had a phone or an organiser. Find out who Rachel is." Lestrade asks: "She was writing 'Rachel'?" Sherlock sarcastically says to Lestrade: "No, she was leaving an angry note in German!" Sherlock: "Of course she was writing Rachel." John looks stunned at Sherlock's deduction. Sherlock goes back near the body and looks down at it as he says: "...no other word it can be. Question is: why did she wait until she was dying to write it?" Lestrade asks: "How'd you know she had a suitcase?" There is a policeman outside of the room. Sherlock points down to the body, where her tights have small black splotches on the lower part of her right leg. He explains: "Back of the right leg: tiny splash marks on the hell and calf, not present on the left..." Close up to the victim's legs where Sherlock was pointing to earlier. Sherlock continues in the background: "She was dragging a wheeled suitcase behind her with her right hand." Mud marks are seen on her right leg. Sherlock points as he explains: "Don't get that splash pattern any other way." John and Lestrade are watching intently. Sherlock looks toward Lestrade: "Smallish case, going by the spread." Sherlock: "Case that size, woman this clothes-conscious: could only be an overnight bag, so we know she was staying one night." Lestrade and John keep silent, standing up with their arms crossed while thinking. Sherlock squats down by the woman's body and examines the back of her legs more closely. Sherlock asks: "Now, where is it? What have you done with it?" Lestrade shakes his head and says: "There wasn't a case." John looks at him, surprised. Slowly Sherlock raises his head and frowns up at Lestrade. He says: "Say that again." Lestrade says: "There wasn't a case. There was never any suitcase." Sherlock registers this fact. Immediately Sherlock straightens up and heads for the door, calling out to all police officers in the house as he begins to hurry down the stairs. Sherlock: "Suitcase! Did anyone find a suitcase? Was there a suitcase in this house?" He passes by Lestrade, John as well as a policeman guarding the door.

Most Distinctive (P13)

And Sherlock is like its the same poison as before, its the poison from the serial suicides. And then there's a conversation about the facts that Sherlock has discovered. Okay late 30s, serial adulterer, had a lot of lovers, unhappily married for the last 10 years, you can see that her wedding ring is dirty, all her other jewelry is clean, but the inside is more clean than the outside which means that only polishing regularly. She needed to have a bunch of string of lovers because its hard to pretend to be single for a long time, a number of boyfriends, knew that she was married. She probably worked, she was a businesswoman judging by the attire, media probably judging by the suit color. She was in the rain because her jacket was wet, it was also really windy, because well so this is the response, her outfit is a response to the Sergeant's surprise when the guy says she was from this specific town and she only wanted to stay overnight. He's like how do you know this? Well the coat is wet, the front the umbrella is dry and the collar is wet so that means it was windy but too strong wind for an umbrella. And she's well dressed but she only had a small case, it must have been an overnight case, so she must not have traveled more than two to three hours, and also he knows that because her coat has not had time to dry. And he says where has there been rain like that in London, within a two hour radius? This town.. something. And he knows that she had a case because there are mud splatters on her thigh or her left leg or right leg, so the small case must have left the splatter. He can tell that it was, the forensic scientist at some point shows up and Sherlock just shuts him down. Rachel is or whatever. Or is like where's the case, where's the case? And the guys, the Sergeant's like there never was a case. And Sherlock says what? And Watson's amazed by this the whole time and he Sherlock gets so excited and he runs down the stairs like oh yes its a murder! Like a serial killer. Oh this is so exciting. We just have to wait for him to make a mistake.

Least Distinctive (P11)

He also notices that her jewelry is new, her coat is wet. And so he diagnoses that she is from out of town because her coat is still wet. And she has an umbrella but she didn't use it which means that it was windy. So it's about like a two hour, two hours out of town or something. And so he figures out where she is from. So he tells all this to inspector. And the inspector kind of just, he's excited that Sherlock has figured this out. And then Sherlock says that this person has made a mistake, like the murderer has made a mistake. And when Watson asks him why, he says its because she's in pink. And he means that she had a suitcase, because he notices that on the back of her stockings there were splash marks indicating that she was pulling along a suitcase. And Watson helped by saying that she died through asphyxiation, possibly choking on her own vomit. So that way he came into--he was handy. And then so Sherlock runs out and Watson comes behind and asks the inspector where Sherlock went. And the inspector who doesn't like Sherlock so much, probably because earlier he figured out that she was probably sleeping with one of the other guys on the police team, because he noticed she was wearing the same deodorant as the guy. So she warned Watson about Sherlock, because she says that he really really enjoys this kind of stuff, and that's kind of dangerous because one day he might get tired of... you know if he gets too bored he might be the one who creates these situations that are pretty disturbing.
